Text of the Registers	40

Though it should never overshadow all other activity, the publication of records is one of the most valuable functions of a local historical society. The Banbury Historical Society in publishing an annual records volume well fulfils its obligations in this field, but there are certain historical sources of insufficient length to fill a whole volume, and for this reason Cake and Cockhorse will from time to time publish such records together with appropriate introductions. Most of this issue is devoted to the first of these sources.

We are most grateful to Dr. Thomas Loveday for allowing the publication of the Williamscothe School Registers, and for his most interesting introduction. The drawing of the school reproduced on the cover is based on an 1823 watercolour by J. C. Buckler, also belonging to Dr. Loveday. The registers give a real insight into the workings of a school during a period in which very little is known of the education of the great majority of Englishmen.

With the publication of this important source in Cake and Cockhorse, it may be appropriate to review the society's publications policy in general. So far, an index to wills, two volumes of the Banbury Marriage Registers and Dr. Beeson's much-praised work on Oxfordshire clockmakers have appeared. Immediate plans are for the publication in 1963 of the third and final volume of the Banbury Marriage Registers, and in 1964, of the South Newington Churchwardens' Accounts from 1560 to 1662. The latter have been edited by Dr. E. R. C. Brinkworth and vividly illuminate social conditions in a typical North Oxfordshire parish around the time of the great Oxfordshire revolts of the 1590's. In the more distant future it is hoped to publish the Banbury Gaol Records of the early 19th century, possibly an unique source for penal history, the 16th century borough accounts, further parish registers and a volume on the politics of the parliamentary Borough of Banbury between 1832 and 1880. It is hoped that all of these works will not only be "interesting", in the sense of providing copy for the local press, or "useful" to the person idly interested in pursuing his pedigree, but that they will contribute to that full understanding of the workings, aspirations and values of past local communities which should always be the aim of the local historian. Published records are valuable, but they are no more than the means to a greater end.

SOCIETY ACTIVITIES.

Forthcoming Meetings.

Thursday 31st January. "Heraldry, a Living Art".

J. P. Brooke-Little, Esq., Bluemantle Pursuivant of Arms.

As Bluemantle Pursuivant, Mr. Brooke-Little is one of the officers of the College of Arms. In 1947 he founded The Heraldry Society, of which he is now Chairman. It has grown rapidly in size and now has about 2,000 members, a quarterly magazine The Coat Of Arms, as well as its newsletter The Heraldry Gazette. It has sponsored exhibitions of and lectures on heraldry all over the country, and has done a great deal to maintain and encourage the subject, as expressed in the title of Mr. Brooke-Little's lecture.

Thursday 28th March. "Domestic Architecture in the Banbury Region".

Dr. R. B. Wood-Jones.

Both of these meetings will be held at 7.30 p. m. in the main hall of the Technical College, Broughton Road.

Oxford University Extension Lectures.

Dr. Brinkworth's series of lectures on "Eminent Banburians" will begin on January 30th 1963. The lectures will be given at the Technical College, Broughton Road, and will commence at 7.30 p. m.

EXCAVATIONS AT THE WHITE HORSE SITE, BANBURY, 1962.

The site of the White Horse Hotel in High Street, Banbury has now been vacant for about 18 months, and this summer a number of members of the Society decided that an exploratory dig there would be worthwhile. The only historical reference to the site is made by Beesley who describes it as the most likely site of the medieval Chapel of the Trinity. Although this now seems unlikely, it was hoped to get valuable information about earlier buildings on the site and their relation to the modern line of High Street.

The southern end of the site fronting High Street now consists of cellars about 10 feet deep and extending back about 10 yards from the street, which were part of the Hotel and presumably of 18th - 19th century date. A square was first opened in the cellar floor but the natural clay immediately below the flagstones indicated that the cellars had destroyed all earlier levels when they were dug. This restricted excavation to what had been the Hotel courtyard and outbuildings; here a trench 10 ft. by 8 ft. was cut across the centre roadway, which revealed an oval-shaped pit with its longest diameter about 4 ft. 6 in. and cut to a depth of 3 ft. in the surrounding clay. This pit produced many sherds of distinctive green-glazed medieval pottery, mainly of the 12th - 13th centuries, as well as unglazed ware and animal bones. For about half its area the black loam which filled it was at a depth of 1 ft. below the present surface, but the rest had been disturbed to a maximum depth of about 2 ft. 6 in. by modern drainage trenches. This, together with the rubble basis of the roadway and the foundations of the Hotel out-buildings, had destroyed any distinct later levels which there may have been about the pit, apart from a few cobbles which could have formed part of a trackway. Similar cobbles were revealed in an adjoining trench, but no really coherent pattern could be discerned.

Much remains to be done, especially between the present trenches and the edge of the cellars, and if the site is still vacant it is hoped to carry on with the work in the Spring of 1963.

In the early years of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Walter Calcott, a wealthy wool merchant of Hook Norton, a member of the Staple of London and perhaps also of the Staple of Calais, bought a small property at Williamscombe and erected a moderate sized thatched manor house.

After settling in as lord of the manor and renewing and revising the rules of the manorial court, Calcott turned his attention to a form of benevolence fashionable at the time, and in 1574 built a thatched grammar school with master's house adjoining, for the education of boys between the ages of eight and eighteen from the neighbouring villages.

The curriculum was to be in two parts - writing and then grammar, the latter including Latin. There were to be 40 boys educated free of charge in addition to the children of the lord and four fee-paying pupils whom the master was allowed to board in an attic of his house. Of the 40 boys, six were to be nominated by the lord, the remainder were all to be selected by lot, six from Williamscombe, eight from Wardington and Coton, six from Cropredy, seven from the Bourtons, four from Mollington and three from Claydon.

In later years and probably from the beginning access from Cropredy and the villages beyond was eased by the provision of a plank path on the north side of the road from Cropredy Bridge, where it is apt to flood, and by a raised path between two hedges on the south side of the lane up the incline to Williamscombe, so as to keep the children's feet free of mud.

In the school itself the lord's children had the right of sitting next the fire, and the dunce's stool was by the roadside outside the door - and there is still remembered an old man in Cropredy who spoke with some pride of having sat upon it. Since about 1830 the public way has been diverted and the way in front of the school is a private drive, but it continued to be used by children coming to the school until the school itself was closed.

Calcott committed the management of the school to a self-perpetuating body of trustees, except that the nomination of the headmaster lay with the lord, who was responsible for his salary of £13 a year, and for the maintenance of the school and the master's house.

It is interesting to note how many family names still known in these villages are found in the earliest registers - for instance, Cherry and Alibone and Lambert, if that is the modern equivalent of Lombard.

Several of the early scholars went on to Oxford University, but so far as is known only one became sufficiently distinguished for record in the Dictionary of National Biography - Peter Alibone, a learned divine of the early seventeenth century.

The master was to be "honest, discreet and learned", but as time went on it became increasingly difficult to get a man of distinction to fill the post - partly because owing to inflation the salary of £13 with a house and a few boys' fees was inadequate and partly because the family of Taylor, which bought the property from Calcott's descendants in 1633, was not much interested in the school. The registers in Calcott's book cease in 1656, and the Taylors degraded it into a domestic commonplace book of accounts and recipes. A list of some of the masters appears in the Victoria County History.

Sadly the school soon became in effect a free elementary school. In 1814 it was united with the National Society, and the numbers were probably allowed to increase by the admission of other than charity scholars. The 1820-1 lists, which are not in Calcott's book, confine themselves to the charity scholars.

In 1857 the school was closed as it was too small and too distant to serve the villages conveniently. John Loveday, whose father had married the last representative of the Taylors, redeemed the school and master's house and garden and also the master's stipend, and the resulting monies were paid to the authority.

Note

An article on the School will be found in the Oxfordshire Victoria County History Vol. 1. p. 348, written by Mary D. Lobel. The present article derives partly from it and partly from other sources.
